Edited by Evy Johanne Håland
2008-10-01, 9781847188700,
Hardback
34.99GBP, US: $69.99

"Dr Evy Johanne Håland is to be congratulated on assembling a rich and thought-provoking collection of contributions on the subject of 'Women and Death on the Margins of Europe and Beyond'. As she remarks, the most notable works on the subject of death were written quite some time ago; yet it is arguable that the subject has never been more timely, given the increasingly interdisciplinary approaches to questions of culture in university teaching and research and the need for common themes around which to articulate specialist work."

—Angela Bourke MRIA, Professor of Irish-Language Studies

"Editor Evy Håland has done the scholarly world a great service in bringing together this set of essays. Each chapter reflects extremely careful research and offers a wonderful richness of descriptive detail."

—Jim Wilce, Professor of Anthropology, Editor, Blackwell Studies in Discourse and Culture, Northern Arizona University

"There are strong warnings from the author that the story of her life in her Yaqui Indian family in California and Arizona contains gruesome and horrifying details. These include accounts of morbid beatings and blatant and ugly episodes of sexual abuse as well as cold-blooded murder by the parents of twins immediately following their birth. Dr. Julie Abril's Bad Spirits a rare and unvarnished story of her survival, with deep emotional scars, from a childhood, adolescence, and young womanhood filled with almost unbelievable violence."

The Myth of Culture: Why We Need a Genuine Natural Science of Societies

Nigel Barber
2008-07-01, 9781847186195, Hardback
39.99GBP, US: $79.99

"Nigel Barber has done it again! Barber is a first-rate scholar with a gift for tackling successfully issues of culture from an evolutionary psychological perspective. Barber's new book, The Myth of Culture, is a tour de force of his own and others' work indicating that 'culture' is not a causal force, but is generated by evolved psychological mechanisms, with the result that any sensible and comprehensive analysis of culture must invoke an evolutionary perspective. Barber's book is not only a scholarly achievement, it is equally well-written and engaging. Anyone with an interest in culture, evolution, or their interface will enjoy this book immensely, even if they disagree with some of Barber's arguments or conclusions."

—Todd Shackelford, Professor of Psychology, Florida Atlantic University is the primary task of ethnography. This timely volume shows not only why evidence is a vexed question, but why what counts as evidence is quite properly itself an artifact of the ethnographic process. A genuinely useful read."

—Christina Toren,
University of St Andrews

"What is it about evidence that has produced such a singular silence within anthropological treatments of method and epistemology? How Do We Know? is just the kind of collection we need to get a conversation going, and goes a long way toward helping us situate the concept of evidence in—and for—anthropology. The editors have brought together an impressive roster of established and emerging scholars, all of whom provide fascinating case studies through which to work out questions of evidence. Anyone interested in how anthropology gets done, and what it produces in the doing, will want to have this book on their shelf."

—Matthew Engelke,
London School of Economics
